Curb Appeal Made Easy:

Garden-in-a-Box Program Provides Homeowners with Beautiful and Water-Saving Affordable Alternatives

As the housing market continues to struggle, homeowners are competing like never before to get their property noticed. Unfortunately, for many homeowners, making their property the one might come with a hefty price tag and some tough choices to make. How do they make their property a must-have? Do they buyers may be water-saving xeriscape landscaping.

The curb appeal of any home is critical. It really sets the stage for the home buyer. Its the first impression and can either make or break the home buyers image of the property as a whole, says Real Estate 8zs Angela McGrath Moss, Real Estate Broker.

Xeriscaping can be an easy way to increase the curb appeal of any home without spending a fortune. According to Colorado WaterWise, xeriscapes can increase property values by up to 15%.

Lucky for Front Range residents, local non profit Center for Resource Conservation (CRC) offers a Fall and Spring Garden-in-a-Box program that provides even the most novice gardeners with a great alternative. The gardens are designed by professional landscapers and include beautiful, native plants in a variety of colors and textures. The program provides residents with complete instructions (think plant by number!) and diagrams that enable the homeowner to easily dig the holes and plant their gardens according to the landscapers designs.

Starting July 26th, the CRC began taking orders for their Autumn Shade Festival perennial plant collection at The gardens range from 2 to 24and contain 20 plants for $125. The garden is a beautiful collection of bronze and reddish hues perfect for a partly shady area and is professionally designed by local landscaper Kenton Seth of Timberline Gardens in Aurora.
